You can get different results by separating the search terms or replacing them with other words. In addition to "knack," "technique," and "skill," you can also search for "tips" and "method" to find books on presentation skills.

When you enter a search term in the free word field, you may get hits for books that include your search term in the table of contents. It may seem like an unrelated book, but it may contain information you want to know.

When you are looking for materials, check the holdings information first. And confirm that a book is not checked out and in which area of the campus library it is located. Then let's go to the bookshelf and look for the book by using the call number. Please note that the location of the book may differ depending on the call number. For example, in "Ookayama Main Lib. B1F - General Books", books with call numbers 400-699 are located far away from books with other call numbers.

① If it is part of a copyrighted work, you may copy it at the library.

* "Copy" in this context does not mean copy and paste, but copying using a photocopier.

② Do not make copies on behalf of others in the library, regardless of whether there is a charge or not.

③ Do not treat someone else's work as your own writing. You can use someone else's sentence in your own report as long as it is properly cited*. When you cite it in your report, you must clearly distinguish it from your own writing as a "citation" and indicate the source. *Proper citation: the minimum extent necessary to support your ideas.
